Sixty-seven-year-old Emma could not live on a pension of £63 a week, she was paying £98.54 a week to keep the house she loved. And to complete the financial picture, she was spending £4,000 a year on the flat's maintenance. So she sold her house and bought herself a new one, this time on a one-and-a-half-acre plot. Instead of the annual council tax bill of £2,550, her new home was free. A garden that was one of her favourite pursuits for 35 years was also given to her without cost. On top of that, she could pay her council tax on the estate's pewter-coloured stone walls, with views over the downland from her front windows, for just £185 a year. And for £28 a year she could keep the well-maintained garden out back as well. But don't expect her to moan or groan about the new outlay. She says it is better than what she now pays. "The worst thing is to have to pay £18,000 on a house and £5,000 on a garden. I'm retiring in just a few months' time. I feel so fortunate," says Emma, who wouldn't give her last name. For Emma, a family friend, the move has been a way of improving her quality of life, which had been somewhat marred by years of living in a house she describes as "very, very poor". It wasn't until she was diagnosed with cancer that the caretaker offered her the chance to buy a free property. "I didn't think it would ever happen to me," she says. "I have always wanted to get into an independent retirement so I could do things on my own." When her friend found her a house, she says, she was so sure it was the perfect choice that she offered to pay the seller's fee. "I said, 3e33713323
