They're dirty, they're the thorns in your side, they're the bane of every hunter. Some have mysterious powers, others have their methods, and some just don't fit the mold that people expect from a nether-World form. And no, I don't talk about Chaperones. Here are the 4 Species of nether-World beings. Genies Genies are a general name used to describe a whole host of creatures that live in the nether-World that are not directly under the Ark-NPC's control. The main difference between the four Genies is their personalities and Traits. The majority of Genies are mad, evil, and malicious Ridiculously powerful Are full of insanity and evil Are not categorized by the common creature type like Skeletons and Wolves All in all, I'd say their personalities are closer to the Legacy of the Ancient Elves along with Bandits Bandits Bandits are a basic overworld creature. They can be level 7, grow large, and collect money as part of a Ghastly Ghoul structure. Unlike the other Genies, Bandits wear simple plate armor and wield basic weapons. However, they use the same skull as Ghastly Ghouls. Bandits are just over world-level creatures in the nether-World. They are not particularly powerful or have any unique abilities. Most Bandits don't carry any special equipment, and don't interact with the Ark-NPC. Ravagers Ravagers are a creature encountered on the nether-World in nether-World 2. These monsters are much more powerful and can be encountered in some of the higher levels. Ravagers can be easily recognized by their armor and gear. They wear full iron armor and wield the most powerful nether weapon in the game, the Brokkator. Like Bandits, Ravagers don't carry any unique equipment. Mobs aren't as crazy as Bandits and usually the Ark-NPC can help. Skeletons Skeletons are skeleton-like creatures that are created by the Ark-NPC on the third level. Unlike Bandits and Rav

A voltammetric assay of adenocarcinoma-derived somatostatin receptor 2 detection. Somatostatin receptors subtypes 2 and 5 are overexpressed in various human tumors including small-cell and non-small-cell lung carcinomas. Their overexpression has been shown to be associated with the growth of some solid tumors and the progression and the prognosis of the disease. Adenocarcinoma is the most common type of lung cancer, for which treatment is based on systematic chemotherapy. A voltammetric assay was developed to detect somatostatin receptor 2 (sstr2) expression using a compound, N-(1-ethylnaphthyl)-5, 8-dimethoxypsoralen (ECH), as ligand. Cells were exposed to different concentrations of ECH for 24 h. Detection conditions were optimized using electrochemical impedance spectroscopy. The best detection conditions were also assessed using chemically etched electrodes. Finally, a linear range of concentration detection was established from 25 to 1000 nM. The limit of detection (LOD) was 25 nM. This voltammetric assay was applied to the analysis of a series of cell lines overexpressing sstr2 and compared with the radioactive binding assay performed using the same cell lines. The two techniques generated identical results. Furthermore, the method could be performed in real time (real-time voltammetry), in a simple and rapid manner. Its advantages include minimal sample preparation and minimum use of chemicals, and it could detect the receptor expression in living cells in real time. Therefore, the voltammetric assay may be useful for the analysis of drugs targeting sstr2-expressing cells and the follow-up of patients undergoing treatment.* Copyright (c) 2007, 2011, Oracle and/or its affiliates.
