In addition, FIFA's "one year in, one year out" set-up grants fans the ability to play the game's greatest stars and most passionate teams when they are at their most dangerous.If you happen to drive to the outskirts of Manhattan a few times a year to visit a client's good sized building, you'll run into something interesting. Lots of manmade ponds. It's a side effect of the flat, rocky terrain that is Manhattan's backyard. Water drainage pipes carve out various shapes. A big drain in a building's parking lot dumps into a tiny, perfectly round, man-made pond. Offer them pizzas and beers while you're there. The tiny pond is filled with wild animals: frogs, turtles and all kinds of birds. If you visit during the spring, you might even find a pair of nesting Great Blue Herons. On one of the building's corners, there is a more grandiose pond, a deep body of water that holds a few dozen large bulrushes. Large oaks grow thickly along the pond's banks. They are in the Museum for Urban Exploration's backyard. The group's name comes from the idea that we are all "urban explorers." We like to go where no one else has gone. We go where people aren't supposed to go. That's why we explore tunnels, abandoned buildings, and the top floors of office towers. When we see something remarkable, we try to do something with it. MUE is a group of urban explorers from all over the New York area. We find our own places to explore. MUE formed in the summer of 2007 after a few of us came together to photograph and document our explorations. The group works on a volunteer basis, partly because getting permits to visit certain places can be difficult. There's even a chance you could get arrested. We've traveled to every borough of New York City. Where we have been, we have taken pictures and collected artifacts. We've shot videos, still photos and written reports.
