Click here to download the video. Creating content for one of the most popular sports video games of all time is no easy task. Not only does it take a lot of effort from the development team, it can also mean a lot of repetition of content and polishing up of existing features if teams can't agree on how a certain feature should work. That was the situation when the team at EA Munich set out to work on FIFA 21, the first major step in the FIFA series' brand new next-generation engine. The decision was to go back to the basics and recreate what makes the beautiful game so special: the best football ever created. It had to be done. "We started our journey with a principle," explains EA Munich's Producer Matthew Wood, "the principle that the game would only look and feel as good as when it was being played by the fans." FIFA 21 will be available on all digital platforms beginning October 24. Gameplay Updates FIFA 21 is adding new ways to celebrate goals with players performing celebrations that can have a significant impact on the game. In the new Fifa 22 Serial Key Arena, players can build up a "Goalwall" prior to a match, enabling them to fill the pitch with club-themed objects that gradually build up to form the goal wall. During the game, players can build up multiple Goalwalls to form a wall on their own goal, and can then jump into the wall and smash balls through it to make stunning goals. Each of these goal celebrations costs a shot, but has a considerable impact on the game. And, if fans are good at goal celebrations, the game will reflect that in more ways than just letting them smash their way to goal. In FIFA 21, fans can also turn their celebration into a match-winning tactic – a goal celebration can be a special skill move. There are 8 different types of skill moves, and fans can unlock the special moves of their favourite teams. In the latest FIFA game, the Brighton & Hove Albion fan skill move is a stunning fizzer.
