These people are hunting the creatures that cause the fog, and hoping to find a way to get rid of it. I've created a new Metro project, added a login, and linked with Mobile Services - all using the samples. Now that I have a project that I've got working, I would like to change it to be mobile, and I'm getting a few errors. The code I'm referencing is from the following url: The errors I'm getting are in the App.xaml file, and are: 'System.Runtime.InteropServices.WindowsRuntime.IServiceCollection' does not contain a definition for 'Register' and no extension method 'Register' accepting a first argument of type 'System.Runtime.InteropServices.WindowsRuntime.IServiceCollection' could be found (are you missing a using directive or an assembly reference?) MobileService.WinPhone Does anyone know what I'm doing wrong here? A: If the error messages in your question are the actual errors then either the reference or the MobileService.WinPhone project is wrong. Have you installed the Windows Phone 8 SDK? When creating a new project in Visual Studio, if you check the "Windows Phone 8.0" option you will get a project structure and option set that matches the SDK. If you are trying to migrate an existing Metro code-base to a WP7 project, there are good instructions here http

According to the fire service, a house fire occurs every 30 seconds on average. A study found that smokers not only show a higher risk of house fires than non-smokers but also that, during a fire, they are far more likely to burn down their own home than non-smokers. And the rate of house fires is increasing. For every 100 houses that go up in flames in Britain in 2006, 40 were due to smoking (a rise of 12 per cent over the previous five years).
