intimacy" by bringing the weather, stock prices, local search and other information to the mobile device. Apple announced a new version of its iPhone, the 4S, on Friday that will run on the then-upcoming iOS 6, the next version of Apple's mobile operating system. Compared to the iPhone 4 and iPhone 4S, the iPhone 5's thinner, a bit longer, narrower and lighter body, along with a Retina display, are meant to be more convenient and comfortable to use. But Google CEO Eric Schmidt said in an interview with Dow Jones' MarketWatch that Apple's iPhone doesn't support the kinds of services Google Now offers, including forecasts about the weather and stocks. "The iPhone has been such a great platform to innovate on. But they didn't have the same commitment to putting services on there," Schmidt said. "So one thing we didn't want to do in this battle was fixate on how Google looks to an iPhone. We want to make sure that the iPhone experience is great, but just as the ultimate Google experience is great." Apple said Friday that people using the iPhone 4 or 4S will be able to upgrade to the iPhone 5 and that those who don't want a physical upgrade can purchase the iPhone on a two-year contract with AT&T, the only U.S. carrier to announce the iPhone 5 in September. Apple CEO Tim Cook unveiled the iPhone 5 at an event in San Francisco on Friday. Google's new iPhone app, which Google didn't formally name but called "Google Now," is available in the iTunes Store and on the Google Play store, which will let Android smartphone users download it for 1cdb3666d
