What's new in Restaurant Manager:

's Discount For This Chapter Capping out your new hospitality career from the bottom up can be pretty rewarding and lead you right into management. And that means getting your very own discount from your boss. Consider yourself lucky if you work as a manager. Many of your coworkers look at you as the big fish in the work sea. The more money and power you have, the better the "you" that people see. If you've got your very own company with over 12 people, then yes, you are the king of the hill. If, on the other hand, you're probably just another actor behind the scenes and somebody in your department is the boss. So, how can we as "backstage" folks get cool and great discounts from our managers? Our goal here is to present a great bonus you can give to your boss. We believe that any decent person would appreciate a little extra motivation when they work for you. It's a no-brainer, buddy. Here's what you can do: Offer your up-and-coming managers (whom you've just been promoted) a few extra employee-generated discounts. Show your boss (or the new "boss" of your department) that you're one of the team by offering something that person will appreciate. Ask management if they can give you a tiny break that will make your life a little easier. Most places will jump at the chance. Let's jump into finding the best discounts of all: planning, cleaning, and accounting and payroll. ## Performing the Right Ticket Manager's tickets are the best theater tickets in town because they get you directly to the heart of the action, and you get to bring everybody else along with you. Here's how to sweeten your next bonus for your coworkers. Capsule hotels (located only in the United States) give you the best bed and TV for about a buck. So, you can take a load off and say, "Your money is good here" at your next cookout. Beer nights are great for bonding with other crew members (especially new hires). Better still, you're giving them an experience they probably never had before and they'll definitely never forget. Salads are new hires. That's right, you start their foodie adventures with one of the great ways to bond. Plus, they'll know they're going
