Spotlight Art of Keeping IT Up & Running- Moving Data and Devices to the Cloud Article Contributors and Authors Art Of Keeping IT Up & Running – Moving Data and Devices to the Cloud By Diane Telser - President/Owner San Francisco Film Academy, Inc. The San Francisco Film Academy, a full-service media production school, has been serving the digital media and web development industry since its inception in 1994. Our goal has been to keep industry professionals abreast of the most recent trends in this profession and the business of digital media through continuing education. Our training programs have continued to evolve and expand to keep pace with the changing technologies and trends in this growing industry. Learn how we’re keeping IT up and running at the San Francisco Film Academy! ART OF KEEPING IT UP AND RUNNING Q: How much of your business is in the cloud, and what role do you think it will play in the future? Diane: We use the cloud to store all of our course materials, files, and archives, and to back up everything we produce. Our content management system is currently in Microsoft’s Office 365, and we’re using Dropbox for file sharing and data backup. The cloud is a secure, reliable, and affordable way to store, share and protect our files. Q: How has cloud computing affected your students’ learning experience? Diane: I find that in the classroom, the cloud is quite a distance away and in the background, and remains untouched. The cloud is heavily involved in our courses, since it is our storage and backup system. We do the same with data for our students as we do for our archives. At the SF Film Academy, the cloud has been a part of our history from the beginning, and it is a part of our future as well. Q: Do you have any tips for anyone struggling with building IT infrastructure to keep it up and running? Diane: The first thing I would recommend is that they start slowly and
