Select comments on the Windows Store version of the game. ... - The game itself is extremely buggy. Audio isn't always very clear, and there's a frustrating amount of bugs in the game. I hate the game with a burning passion, the game itself is horrible. To get through the first mission you're presented with dozens and dozens of bugs (some that you can't even close out). A friend mentioned a similar problem (Report Game) I would recommend everyone who plays this

A hands-on with the DS4's tiny, portable Kinect and a surprisingly compelling game of "catch the asteroid" For the last two years or so, Sony has been trumpeting its new "world's first" Kinect system: a portably-specced, widescreen, motion-sensing lightbox they've built into a PlayStation 4 system. At this year's E3, they demonstrated a working version of the system. The new portmanteau of Kinect and PlayStaion was dutifully entitled Kinect, but it didn't take long for players to tease out its familiar name. The implication was that the system would allow for interesting new ways of playing games, such as games that used the players movements or in some other way took advantage of the system's motion-sensing capabilities. Well, Sony's shied away from that label. They're still calling it Kinect, but they've moved the limit so far from "first" that the system can no longer realistically claim to be the world's first. As such, they've opted to market it as a "PlayStation Connectivity" system, the implication being that you'll be able to use it through your existing set of PlayStation accessories. For the games developers, it's mostly of interest as a means of hooking the new system into their existing games. But for a new fangled system aimed at the gamer that wants something to replace their 30-inch TV, there are more reasons to buy this than just the opportunity to play games by waving their arms about. Not least of which is that the system is cheap - about $250. For that price, you get a tidy little lightbox, looking more like a dusty old PDP-11 than the flaming weapon of cinematic destruction we were anticipating. Here we see the top

Cover by Erik Heyman & Polvo - Feb. 16th 2013 - "I'm just coming to say goodbye - My time here's going double-time/slipping a little deeper into that bright yellow ocean/we all have our time's end/recombining life" -Tori Amos, "Lullaby" (From Glassheart) You will not believe what a wonderful surprise you got? Just wanted to let you know that just hours before you got here, I finished completing this dance; a song inspired by one of my favorite short films of all time, Dune (by the Liev Schreiber movie). I saw it the week prior, and the ending had me completely stunned by it's emotional power, and more specifically, the brilliantly timed end credits. I instantly understood what made the film such a successful melodrama, the absolute impossibilities of life, not knowing what the future holds, etc. I also felt a little sad that the son (Jake) had died (spoiler), and again the ending made me feel a little sad too. The piano giving us the "whoa-hoo's", was the one playing on a ride at Disneyland (I'm serious). The new song is totally the sonic and musical equivalent of the end credits, listening to it performed live will absolutely blow you away, I promise you! MART-1 is a live action physics simulation video game where you build and control a fleet of spacecraft to explore the Red Planet! Explore the far reaches of space on a new planet: Mars! From orbit to the surface and everything in between - take a tour of the most surprising and diverse planet in our solar system. Use the EON MART (Mars Explorer On-board Navigation & Telemetry) to customize and test your rover's vehicle system, then venture into the open world to explore and expand your base. Its time to explore the far reaches of Mars. The surface of Mars is where the action is. The winds blow fast, the sand shifts and changes the terrain, there are over twenty billion years of erosion and even a bit of volcanism. All this will test your rover in ways no other machine can. Like a carpenter building a tent, it's up to you to use the tools available to build it up, modular and flexible to handle any situation. Its perfect for solo play or multiplayer survival, be your own boss, or join up with a friend. A whole world awaits. Mars is a unique simulation game where your destiny is dictated by you. Build your first Martian base, drive across the base into the unknown, prepare for a journey to the Red Planet and get to know the flora and fauna of this intriguing alien world. A New Type of Simulation Game Steep gameplay, deep customization, robust vehicle physics, and open-ended sandbox gameplay - all wrapped in a live action Martian backdrop. Try to survive. Martian Habitat Survive in your base on Mars. Drive across the landscape, collect resources, take shelter in it's day and night. It is up to you to ensure the survival of your outpost. Martian Base Customize your base and play solo, or join a friend to explore the planet. Drive through the base to the surface, access your base via vehicles and move your equipment between modules. Get to know the flora and fauna of the Red Planet. Martian Biosphere Martian Biosphere is where this simulation game comes to life. Craft everything you need to survive from simple tools to more complex machines. Power up the base with the elemental power of the martian landscape - Volcanoes, Tides, Winds and more - or use the limitless resources available to you on the surface. Martian Rovers There
