ManyToMany without relationship table I'm writing a flask application with SQLAlchemy, where I have two models: application and add-on. These models have a many-to-many relationship, such that an application can have many add-ons, and an add-on can be part of multiple applications. What I am having trouble with is the relationship itself. In my DB, applications and add-ons are only stored in one table, not a join table (so I would have to go through application_add-on twice to get the data I need). Is there an easy way to create this relationship that allows me to query my data and add a certain add-on to a particular application? A: This is a bit of a weird situation. From the explanation you provided, it sounds like you should just be able to attach the necessary tables directly. In other words, they don't need to be in a relationship
