According to ESPN's Chris Broussard, the Clippers plan on offering a five-year deal to Griffin that will make him the highest-paid Clipper in history. That deal would be worth in excess of $200 million, according to ESPN's Tim McMahon, but the NBA's collective bargaining agreement stipulates that the largest contract in NBA history had to be given out to a player who has already become the league's Most Valuable Player. Sam Amick of USA Today: "Look, let's be honest: Los Angeles was not a destination for Blake Griffin until Doc Rivers took a chance on him. But he'd be making history, as the highest-paid Clipper, if he agrees to a five-year, $200 million deal." Jonathan Abrams of Sports Illustrated: "Honestly, that's the elephant in the room. Griffin's a better player than DeAndre Jordan, and he's the best unrestricted free agent in the league (and No. 2 overall, you need to be a superstar to make this lucrative). But the inescapable truth is that the Clippers aren't a destination. And it's not like Griffin is the only one they could be giving five years to." After spending most of his career not in the playoffs, Blake Griffin has seven straight trips to the postseason under his belt. AP Photo/Charlie Neibergall We were all well aware of the fact that the Clippers didn't have a true superstar on their roster, but none of us thought that was a deal-breaker. For all the Clippers' postseason failures, they've been very good when Griffin's on the floor, even when Paul or Jamal Crawford is in the lineup. On the other hand, Griffin's the guy who leads the
