It has been observed that due to spin-orbit interaction, metal-insulator transition (MIT) in ferromagnetic semiconductors Fe(Mn)/Ge results in a strong magnetoresistance. In this experiment the effect of spin orientation on the MIT is studied by the use of a heterojunction consisting of two ferromagnetic semiconductors, i.e., Fe(Mn)/Ge and Fe(Mn)/Pd(Ge). All samples are characterized by the measurement of magnetoresistance. The contrast of the MIT is observed from the state of spin orientation of the heterojunctions in the range between parallel and antiparallel. The effect of spin orientation on the effect of a bias voltage is also studied.
