Giant primary acellular crescentic amniotic membrane transplantation combined with simple suture for treatment of severe chemical eye burns. To evaluate the efficacy and safety of giant primary acellular crescentic amniotic membrane transplantation combined with simple suture for the treatment of severe chemical eye burns. A prospective interventional case series. Six patients with severe chemical eye burns were enrolled in this study. Grafting was performed within 7 days after injury in all patients. Acellular crescentic amniotic membrane was harvested from the hyalinized area on the umbilical cord and transplanted to the injured cornea with a simple interrupted suture technique. Best-corrected visual acuity, slit-lamp examination, and the extent of the burned area. Of the six eyes that were enrolled, two were graded as stage 3 and four were stage 4. The mean follow-up period was  $6.4 \pm 3.6$  months. No patient lost light perception because of hyphema or choroidal detachment. The median best-corrected visual acuity before surgery was 20/200, which improved to 20/63 ( $P = .000$ ) after surgery. The median size of the crescent was 4.4 mm in diameter. At the last examination, the median size of the crescent was 4.8 mm in diameter, which was smaller than before. Follow-up slit-lamp examination revealed that the sutures used to fix the transplanted crescent had not torn. No recurrence of the crescent was observed. Primary acellular crescentic amniotic membrane transplantation combined with simple suture technique is a useful, simple, safe, and effective surgical option for the treatment of severe chemical eye burns, which led to refractive and functional improvements, as well as stable sutures without recurrent ectropion.
