The pattern of a simple rhythmic or continuous movement is generated in the cerebellar neurons fire a regular burst of spikes, which is repeated with a constant cycle. This simple pattern-generating system is composed of a reciprocally coupled hexapolar type "W"-circuit. The pattern-generating system exhibits a speed-dependent cycle period and is sustained for a long time during a constant rhythm. 3. Another is a pattern generator of a movement trajectory: the neostriatal neurons fire in a manner that their length histograms approximate a given spatial profile. The neostriatal pattern generator was considered to be composed of a simple "type 2" or "R"-circuit, in which the cross-correlation of postsynaptic potentials in the Purkinje cells is maintained with a constant delay. 4. Both the simple and the complex pattern-generating systems undergo subliminal activation or suppression in
