There are quite a few around but can't quite find one for JJSploit (WeAreDevs).Splash them with alcohol first. Ideally, this should be a 70% ABV or stronger, but the best splash is made by hitting water with a Scotch at 80-90% ABV. Reduce it to half strength. Ask the person to take a sip, and refuse to drink it if it isn't palatable. A lot of people can't stomach the bitter taste or don't like the taste of alcohol. If this is the case, you will have to keep your whiskey inside your fridge. Finish it with some water. You can give your drink an alcohol free finish by mixing some water with the remaining 30% ABV of your whiskey. The water dilutes the liquor and will also cool the drink. Transfer the mixture into a new container so that you don't mix the original whiskey and water again. It isn't a mess, but you don't want to accidentally drink your whiskey if you start pouring a mix. Makes 1 serving. Enjoy your whiskey straight from the bottle or pour a little into a glass. It will likely take about 20 minutes for your drink to get cold, so be patient.Does your company need to improve their key performance indicators? Then it is time to try an emerging performance based approach. The challenge of developing effective performance management can be summed up by this Silly Question: Where can you go to find the 'dollar value' of a Customer, or of a member? It seems that you can't go anywhere that you don't know. You can use existing data, or look to develop it. The value of customers in an organisation is the cost that the customer is costing the organisation. The cost can be in many forms, including lower revenues, higher variable costs, lower productivity, lower employment, lost opportunity or goodwill. The value is the reverse. Value can be defined as the customer resources that the organisation has expended to derive an income. Customer value is driven by the total resources the organisation has expended to develop the customer relationship. This could be people, time or money. There is a wide range of
