NCsoft and Capcom are pleased to announce the long-awaited release of Resident Evil 4 HD. This version, a direct port of the latest demo, has been updated to include improvements and fixes made since the demo release on January 10th. Additionally, the demo's new map-editor has been merged into this release and is included in the main zip as free DLC. Resident Evil 4 is a great game, and this is a damn good port. You can safely say the more you can get out of a port like this the better it is.

Q: Constructing mixed-member output per-instantiation of a template class I have a class whose template members function as various non-virtual type-dependent template functions. I have implemented a templated templated version of the class (as explained in this question) - here's a short example, it will be used for a template on a chain of classes:

#include #include class A { public: template A() { this->initialize_type(std::forward()); } template A(const std::pair& lhs, const A& rhs) { this->initialize_type(std::forward(lhs)); this->initialize_type(rhs); } template void initialize_type(const T& input) { std::cout name() underlying_t.name(); } private: template struct underlying_type { using first_type = U; using second_type = V; }; template struct underlying_type,
